

Where is the money? Why are so many people unable to afford health care or much of anything else? As Wall St has continued to profit and wealth has continued to be concentrated, jobs and wages for most of us have shrunk or remained flat. The failure of tax cuts for the “job creators” to create jobs or in any way provide for the majority (80-90% or more of us have negative net worth) is evidence of a failed economic theory. When will Americans catch on?

Public and private Budget cuts can benefit the American people instead of the ruling class.

Military and government: Cut out the middle men. Hire the worker bees directly. Fire all contractors. The expensive part of government expenditure, the profit of investors and the high cost of management, will be eliminated. The majority of jobs will be saved and there will be more money to pay the workers. See the growth of budgets and debt, especially since Reagan's privatization and Star Wars scams that borrowed from people's Social Security to pay the profit of contractors, vendors and their investors and CEOs. The leeches continue to grow richer while the rest of us grow poorer. When they've sucked the treasury dry they blame entitlements and unions. But who has the money? Eliminate this fraud by deprivatization. What we need in common we must do in common, of, by and for the people.

Medicine: the profit of investors and high priced management are the most unnecessary part of Medicare and all other health industry costs. Cut out the middle men. The American people can hire the providers directly. We already pay for the pharmaceutical research but give the profits to big pharma. Cut the fat from the health care budget, public and private. Get rid of the rich owners and their expensive managers, who take from the many for the benefit of the few. Get rid of insurance and corporate medical providers who fatten on our tax dollars by defrauding Medicare. [see Bill Frist and HCA for a prime example.] Keep the doctors and nurses and the rest of the real health care providers. Let them work for us, instead of the proprietors of the health care system. The reason we the people can't afford health care, public or private, is the concentration of wealth with investors and managers at the top of the economic ladder.

Finance: Get rid of middle men brokers and agents who add cost to money movement but are not necessary to the transactions, except to offload work from the heart of an overly centralized (on Wall St) financial system. Cut private profit from banking, insurance and investment, to cut the high cost of parasitic finance. Pay premiums only for real work and material products. Accountants, managers and other functionaries of abstract economy can work at lower compensation than real workers. Take the con out of economy.

Our high overhead system and the cons who operate it are the cause of economic failure. The more that wealth is concentrated, the less there is for real life needs. In general: those who do less real work, should be paid less than those who struggle with material tasks. The reason our government and most of the rest of us can't afford what we must have and are forced into debt in order to live is understood by asking a question. Who has all the money? I've listed three of the biggest economic frauds and abuses. To find the rest, look to see who got the money and who has it yet.
